Due to its very compact shape, the Flat Pear Lead is less susceptible to crosswinds and can therefore be cast very far. The compact shape is an advantage on muddy ground. If you use a light flat pear there and let the lead sink into the mud, the carp will strike against a strong resistance when you pull it off. This means that the self-hooking effect is as good with a flat pear that has sunk into the mud as it usually is with heavier leads.

Because the flat pear has a large and round bend, you can feel its impact on the bottom of the water better than with slim leads.

The Flat Pear lead is excellent for fishing with the Solidz PVA bags because its shape allows it to sit well in one of the two corners at the bottom of the PVA bag. This shifts the center of gravity of the PVA bag to the front and thus enables greater precision when casting.
